

Women Empowerment

APJ Abdul Kalam remarked, “Empowering women is prerequisite for creating a good nation, when women are empowered, society with stability is assured. Empowerment of women is essential as their thoughts and their value system leads to the development of a good family, good society and ultimately a good nation.”

India is progressive and always adopted different strategies especially to uplift the status on women even before globalization. By understanding the challenges, competition introduced by globalization Government of India has realized the necessity of encouraging women participation in different fields, and is further making and implementing new programmes and policies required for women empowerment.

Following are some of the articles, which show various efforts done by Government of India for dealing with the issue of gender disparity at various levels, e.g for reducing infant and maternal mortality rate, educational programmes for women, encouragement given to NGOs which are working for women empowerment etc.
